

A PSYCHO-SOCIOLOGICAL ANALYSIS ON THE PERSPECTIVE OF TURKISH PEOPLE ON IMMIGRATION - CORUM CASE

Assoc. Prof. Dr. Muammer Cengil

Head of the Department of Psychology of Religion, Hitit University, Faculty of Divinity, Corum, Turkey

Abstract

Our country is experiencing massive migration from various countries, primarily from Syria and Iraq. While these migrations stimulate the sense of helping on some people, they cause negative reactions on others. Economic concerns are the leading among the causes of these reactions. That some vital investments needed in the country can be done with the amount given to migrants or more help to our own citizens in need may be provided are some of the reasons articulated from time to time.

In this study, we will do a psycho-sociological analysis of the viewpoint of locals towards immigrants coming to our country from the perspective of variables such as age, gender, socio-economic status, level of education, religious orientation status and so on.

Our study will be performed by using quantitative screening method on the sample that we will determine in Çorum province. It is thought that the data obtained could be used as a data source in social policy to be produced for migrants.